

---

Subject: Re: Degradation of renegade?

Posted by cheesesoda on Mon, 21 Jul 2008 20:58:50 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Aircraftkiller wrote on Sun, 20 July 2008 13:28 I think the answer is that you kept pushing the issue and didn't shut up when you were asked to. I know you think you have a right to play on a server and that you're the leet old school gosu, but you're not. You don't have to agree with what they do on their server, but the keyword here is "their server" which inherently means "not yours".

You don't go into someone else's home and just do whatever you want, do you? My suggestion to you is to listen next time and don't come here to whine about how you were "mistreated" by some idiot moderating a game server for a dead game.

I ignored his long rant, and started reading replies. I read yours, and thought you probably were off on another tangent. Actually READ his rant, and came to the same conclusion as you did.

Seriously, whining over such a petty thing as that? I mean, even if the rule is a bit pointless, it's still the damn rule.

Nobody has the "right" to voice their opinion in someone else's house. If it was a right, then the home owner wouldn't be able to do anything except deal with it. However, the home owner can kick the annoying bastard out of his/her home, so there is no such "right" for the guest.

As far as the argument that it's a "public" server. That doesn't matter. Business owners (the obvious parallel) have the same right to boot any annoying asshat out of their place of business at any point for any reason. Well, maybe not "any" reason, but they should, nonetheless.

---