Well, nothing has happened still, and it now seems that Ahmadinehad could likely lose his presidency in a little while. Ali Larijani, the most public face, and leader of Iran's nuclear negotiation team is gearing up to replace Ahmadinejad in the upcoming election.

Already, Larijani seems to be the favorite of Ali Khamenei, who is the top-dog in Iran, and the conservatives within Iran are very upset with Ahmadinejad's horrible economic policies, and militant foreign policy.

It also helps that Larijani is a pragmatist who is generally unencumbered by ideology, and wants a solution to this nuclear situation.

This is probably why the US is slowly reaching out diplomatically... once Ahmadinejad is out of the picture, and Larijani is in, America will likely create more diplomatic ties with Iran.

This article by Time is a decent summation of what is likely going to happen within the next year or two.
