The way I learnt what little PHP I know (enough to make a rather simple web order form) was simply through having something worthwhile to do with it. When I had a goal, I instinctively found out the best way to program it. I don't like these "teach yourself php in 24 hours!" books because they force you to do everything a certain way. I prefer to try it one way, and then decide it's better a different way, and then I've learnt twice as much stuff.
