People are making such a big deal out of little imperfections about the ceremony and talking about self-created images about China as they are fact, such as every single person being stripped of his or her right. For someone who's been to China a couple of times and have relatives there, I'm gonna have to tell these people that the majority of the Chinese population is happy with their life and not everyone is being suppressed like Tibet.

Although I did think that the computer generated footprints on T.V. was a bit irritating, but at least they didn't lie about it.
