

---

Subject: Re: WW3

Posted by Ryu on Mon, 18 Aug 2008 21:32:26 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

nikki6ixx wrote on Sat, 16 August 2008 17:38It wasn't too long ago, that people believed the next 'cold war' would involve the United States, and China. However, China is totally dependent upon the American economy doing well, and America is totally dependent on cheap goods from China to help stave off the effects of inflation, and keep a high standard of living.

Because the world is so interconnected by money, business, trade, and communication, there is little chance of there ever being another war on the scale of the previous world wars.

However, I am worried about Russia's actions, because they help demonstrate to the world how powerless America, and NATO are at this moment.

I don't know what you've been reading but apparently Russia are somehow helping Georgia people (Hilarious fox news report on it, but some kids states it) now it's not every day you see a American kid, primarily American kid, saying "Thanks to Russia for helping us" (we all know America hates Russia but I'm being a generalizing asshole here) so yeah, haven't been keeping up with the Russian war but eh - it's nothing.

---