What a sad day when the egotistical and idiotic majority has its way and bans a true hero. What did he ever do that would warrant a permanent ban? Perhaps a temporary ban for rule breaking, but a permanent one? All he did was hold up a symbolic mirror to everyone here and showed how they truly were. Most people here have a lot of rage in them and are as heartless as they claim troop to be.

Also, lets not forget the validity of this poll. How can they're be 70 different people on the forums?

There's only ever about 15-20 posters that I can think of. There's a lot of people just lurking who never post at all. And it's not impossible that if anyone disliked troop enough they would make secondary accounts to vote yes. 11 people voted Yes in my my vote to ban crimson topic. Are those legitimate votes or people messing around like they did here?

What you don't get is that the majority DIDN'T get their way. All the majority did was make the moderation team take a harder look at troop's input in the community and realized that he was no longer balancing his bullshit posts with quality posts and has become nothing more than a troll. They made the decision by themselves. All this poll did was give them a reason to take a hard look at what he meant to the community.

What you also missed was the fact that Goztow made mention of troop's being banned before for breaking the rules. He had been warned, yet showed no regard for the wishes of the administration.

Oh, and he made baseless assumptions about people. Sure, he did show that most of the forum members aren't as mature as they should be (and I include myself in that), but in no way were what he said about others even near the truth.
