We will never know the background details of 9/11 and though I ain't one of those hardcore conspiracy whack-jobs, I ain't buying the official BS story.

Hoewever, what I feel is most important here is the lives lost. I feel so bad for the people who lost their lives on that day.

I remember that day like it was yesterday. It was about 8:30 or 8:40...maybe 9:00 AM on that day. I was in my computer class. Then the PA system came on and our school principal announced that there has been a "tragedy" in New York City. He even called for a moment of silence. We all rose to pay our respects.

Right after that, being in a computer class, we hit the internet. I went to most of the websites trying to find any bit of information. Soon, the details began to come through.

Then the period ended and we had to go to a different class. anyway, by 12:00 PM in swimming class, I knew most of the grissly details. I remember sitting in my school's huge pool area in my swimming shorts with teary eyes (more in shock).

After the school was over, I literally RAN across the highway. My school was less than a mile away from home so I ran so fast home. I just ran right across the highway without even looking for cars. After I reached home, I got to the tV...my mom was already watching. The rest of the day was just a misty memory...

I feel SO bad for the lives that were taken in cruel ways. My sister is a seasoned flight attendant and I know how exactly it would have felt for the families...I worry about her everyday.
