
Subject: Re: AVITARS

Posted by BlueThen on Sat, 25 Oct 2008 03:42:06 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Aircraftkiller wrote on Fri, 24 October 2008 22:34 Quackpunk wrote on Wed, 22 October 2008 01:34 samous wrote on Tue, 21 October 2008 19:03 here is one i used on a star trek forums:
I always found star trek to be redundant and full of unnecessary fictional sci-fi lingo.

It's neat that you brought that up, considering a lot of technology today was foreseen or inspired by Star Trek. Cell phones in particular are one device that bears a striking resemblance to the ST:TOS communicators. Touch panel displays, voice activated computers and things like warp drive are reality or are within the realm of physics. so all of that "unnecessary sci-fi lingo" is more of a benefit to the show than you seem to appreciate, which is fine, because I doubt the show was written with people like you in mind.

I really wouldn't call it any kind of prediction or anything. It was just concepts that inspired much of technology today.

Oh, and

File Attachments

1) pixeloo_stewie.jpg, downloaded 780 times

