Statistically, Mac's got a very hard fight.

This graph shows the electoral college score over time counting only those states where one candidate has a lead of at least 5%.

The states where the race is very close don't count here. For what it's worth, Kerry's campaign barely touched 300 EV's.

Frankly, turnout will probably be huge this election, and that factor will also benefit Obama because he appeals most to younger voters.
