
Subject: Jonathon Ross and Russel Brand
Posted by futura83 on Thu, 30 Oct 2008 17:56:34 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

<http://news.uk.msn.com/Article.aspx?cp-documentid=10472838>

Right, so this programme was recorded first, so it wasn't live, so really it shouldn't have aired.

But what i find most interesting is that there were only a few complaints at first, yet when more people heard about it they rang in and complained....who's betting that most of them hadn't actually seen the show, but heard the news about it either from telly or from a friend or something.

What do we all think about this sorta thing? Has it been blown out of proportion due to people sheepishly complaining about it?

I think it has, although i think they are complete idiots for actually doing it. If the BBC had any sense about the 'incident' it would not have been broadcast, and the situation could have been pretty much contained...although, this kinda thing woulda leaked out anyway, it certainly wouldn't have been so big.
