I'm not entirely against public education, as long as people have a choice to where they send their kids... be it public or private. That way, kids aren't indoctrinated like they are in America.

The Constitution is a well-written document, and it limits government to the size that I like it. Not to mention that America is a republic, and if the people aren't above the law, neither should the government be. To disrespect the rule of law is to become a democracy, and democracy is just another word for mob rule.
