Quote: Does obama plan to make policies that force you to go to a public school? No sarcastic question or something, I dont know that much about the candidates (since I cant vote anyway because im, uh, not american) positions. Don't know for sure, but if he can, I guarentee he would. I know alot of Democrats want to outlaw homeschooling, and a good majority of public schools lean towards the democratic side (AKA, obama's side).

Quote: Still, you shouldnt just say "their behaviour is unconstitutional", say what exactly is wrong about it. I dont know the constitution (again, not being american), so when you say that their positions, laws and acts arent constitutional I dont really know what you mean by that ;(

He means the government breaks the laws the people have to follow. And the laws that are specifically stated FOR the government to follow. The constitution, in short, is a document made as a general guideline for both the people and for the government to follow. But mostly, it's a paper meant to restrict the government's ability. When they start controlling and changing things for specific people like taxes, education, and so on, they're going against the constitution. Cheesesoda would be better at explaining this than me, though.

Quote: ? How is every act of disrespecting the law to become a democracy? I dont really see that link.

Democracy is majority control, no matter how stupid the majority is. A Republic is a country ruled by law- Both the government and its people must abide by it.
