You hide behind religion and a pseudo-standard "family formula" that has not existed for as long as people try to claim. It's always changing, and it always has been.

As far as this debate goes, God and the Bible are irrelevant. I would argue that God and the Bible is irrelevant in the world period, but that's a different argument for a different day.

Just about everything in the world compromises someone else's values. We eat cows, that's morally wrong in Hinduism. Some cultures eat dogs, horses, and cats. We see this as mainly morally wrong and disgusting. Many people think alcohol consumption is immoral and seeing someone drunk makes them uncomfortable. The same goes for smoking. Sex, although natural, and we all were created out of the act (except for many a rare exception with artificial insemination), many people are ashamed of the act and are absolutely repulsed by the idea of prostitution. Yet, at one point, the Catholic church used to make money off of prostitution and condoned it as a "necessary evil".

While I certainly have intolerance for a lot of lifestyles and acts, I recognize that as long as no unwilling participant is being harmed in the act or lifestyle, it shouldn't be prohibited. Otherwise, you're just catering to a bunch of egotistical, self-important assholes who seem to claim moral supremacy and take it upon themselves to guide the blind. Guess what, morons? You're just as fucking blind as the rest of us. However, you're too god damn ignorant to realize it because you suck on the teet of some imaginary being and it's "book of wisdom" that was written by man several thousand years ago. Tell me, who are the ones that are truly lost? Because, to me, it's starting to look like it's you.
