G or N won't make a difference unless you have either G or N wireless NICs inside every PC in the network, because of the throttle-down factor.

If you currently have wireless B NICs in your network, you'll notice no real difference in speed wirelessly.

You'll never notice a difference in the hardwire speed unless you bought a gigabit switch, which even then you'd need a gigabit NIC to even reach close to the max speed, and even so that'd only be the speed within your LAN, nowhere else.
