I agree with you. That's why I say he's nothing more than a man taking his place as the leader of the country to try his hand at progressing the nation. I wish him luck, but I am not going to tear him down or build him up until there is reason to do so. He hadn't even been sworn in before he was put up on this impossibly high pedestal.

When a president promises that he's going to do great things, we're going to expect him to do great things.

No disrespect but doesn't every single president we had promised use something and almost all the time has not done it?

its politics were lucky if the one we choose even cares half the time to have someone think politics and president wont lie about a few things then that person is a wet match in a dark cave
