

---

Subject: Re: Good-One-Driver's Hud

Posted by MacKinsey on Fri, 30 Jan 2009 12:16:30 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Quote:The German (and Austrian) postwar criminal code makes the public showing of the Hakenkreuz (the swastika) and other Nazi symbols illegal and punishable, except for scholarly reasons. It is even censored from the lithographs on boxes of model kits, and the decals that come in the box. It is also censored from the reprints of 1930s railway timetable published by Bundesbahn. The eagle remains, but appears to be holding a solid black circle between its talons. The swastikas on Hindu and Jain temples are exempt, as religious symbols cannot be banned in Germany.

Further information: Strafgesetzbuch § 86a

(Shorted Text out of Wikipedia)

A bit more shorted -> You arent allowed to show Swastikas in German Public, except in some temples and for sholarly reasons

Quote:Nice set though, BTW: Hitler wasn't German you know, so don't think all Germans are NAZI Angry (is there a better angry face i can make for this?) He was Austrian. And yes, not every German is a Nazi, there arent much Nazis in Germany anymore.

---