

---

Subject: Re: Humans of yesterday, today and tomorrow

Posted by R315r4z0r on Sat, 21 Mar 2009 16:11:12 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

The only reason why we don't know how Egyptians managed to make those pyramids is because they weren't very clear in the record and evidence department.

Humans forever in the future of this planet will always know when different things happened.. like when we made our first touchdown on the moon.. simply because we have the records to prove it and they are easy to understand.

It's not like one day everyone will suddenly forget all forms of language and lose all memory of things that happened in the past. There will always be someone to carry on the knowledge.

The only way that things like this would be forgotten is if we were to move to other places in space, be it a space colony or even another planet. Eventually things like that would be forgotten through time. But as long as we live on Earth, and there is no near human extinction disaster, we shouldn't forget something like that any time soon. Not even in 3000 years.

---