Hurr, no. That's the stupidest logic. Using your reasoning, people should be allowed to do whatever they want and have no worry about ruining their "first" chance until they're banned permanently. Only "permanent" is anything but with your logic.

No, with my logic, Warnings should only be given to make the person aware they are doing something wrong and a swift punishment should be enforced if they continue shortly after. No pointless week long suspension.

Tell me, how is suspending someone's account for an allotted time considered "giving them another chance?" They are being locked out for a predetermined amount of time. They KNOW they are going to be allowed back in after awhile, so there really is no driving idea behind it that makes them sorry they did what they did. Or sorry that they aren't allowed back into the website for X amount of time.

In scenarios like troop's, people only learn when they are forced to lose something they've grown accustomed to. So by threatening to be banished from the website for an undetermined amount of time is the best and only way to make sure a person gets the message in this kind of scenario.
