The fact that it's over the internet doesn't change the fact that it's another person.

Just because you're anonymous gives you the right to act like a 11 year old jerk?

Yelling at someone, for whatever reason, over an internet game, is the same as yelling at someone in person in a sport. The only slight difference is that you are speaking through a facade of anonymity.

And the fact that you are supposed to be taking on the mature role of enforcing rules on a server is even more of a reason against verbally attacking him like a child screaming over Xbox LIVE.

My point is, there were plenty of other easier alternatives you could have taken to made sure no side problems would have occurred. (side problems like the birth of this thread)
