
Subject: Re: Germans and WW2

Posted by Muad Dib15 on Tue, 28 Apr 2009 00:18:32 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Nune wrote on Sun, 26 April 2009 23:57 Genetix is right, after the mass inflation due to the aftermath of ww1 where the allies seriously screwed germany over at the treaty of versialles, Germans could easily be led astray by anyone who was trying to restore the nation to its former glory. It can easily be argued that if the treaty of versaille was fairer then ww2 wouldn't have happened... but this is deviating from the original question.

Btw though, as an american... How do you feel knowing ur country nuked civillian cities at the end of ww2 killing 1000's of woman and children...

Hey douche, that saved more lives than it took. Firebombing Japan took more lives than both of the bombs. Also, just to get onto the shores of japan was estimated to take 1.5 million Allied lives. You tell me if that is worth taking 220,000 lives from some other country than your own. We weren't exactly feeling very cordial towards the Japanese at that point. After all they attacked us and then declared war. Whereas we told them what would happen for 2 weeks. They refused to surrender so we nuked them. 3 days is plenty of time to say we surrender, but they decided not to surrender. So we nuked them again. more info below, its not a source http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Atomic_bombings_of_Hiroshima_and_Nagasaki
