If it were me getting a computer, I wouldn't look at anything other than AMD. I have always had AMD and will always use AMD until it's just not possible anymore. I have never had problems with any AMD processors where as others I've known with Intel has had their processor die. Although, this is just my opinion... you can buy what you want.

And honestly... if you sit infront of a 3.0Ghz intel and then sit in front of a 2.6Ghz AMD... you couldn't possible see a difference in speed. We're talking nanoseconds here. Ooooohhhh but with Intel, my web browser window would pop up 6 nanoseconds faster than with AMD... and as for the frame rates... what difference between 218 and 184 fps can you honestly see? Exactly... either way it's still smooth, but I bet one processor is cheaper than the other.
