Funny. I have an anecdote about this. I used to play soccer when I was younger, and it used to be before the age of, oh...seven, they would give you a trophy at the end of the season, no matter how shitty you did (I have some trophies from that time from when my team places last in our league). Yet, after a certain time the everyone-gets-a-trophy was replaced by medals, which only winners got. I have more trophies than I do medals, but the medals always meant more.

The point being, "At least I'm attempting" is fine for seven year olds, but after that it stops mattering as much.

I understand your concept your making.

But I mean, you can't really expect a small site like my to compete with any big site until it's known really well.

That's what I was trying to say .

So my saying as "At least I'm attempting" was just me saying, I'm going to try an get to the top one day, going to try hard. But is it really something I can expect to happen any time soon? No I don't think so. Might take years and years, but I know some day it will happen if keep attempting and don't give up.

But I understand your concept Dover.

Makes good sense.
