Sorry my fault, I completely messed up on that. I'm sure that Davis had to deal with Enron in some way in the past because of the energy crisis problems that California was having a while back. Does that make any sense? Anyway if I had to choose between Davis and Arnold I'm not sure which would be better in the long run, but who knows. Arnold might have a fresh new approach to doing things and he has been underestimated before. On the other hand Davis seems to be quite an experienced politician. What was the driving force behind the recall campaign to begin with?
