You're not understanding my point.

People automatically agree to share their IP once they decide connect to the internet, regardless if its a game or not.

But the fact of the matter of what I'm getting at is that it's called a private message. What kind of private message isn't private?

Also, I didn't mean "rights" as in what you can and can't do in the game but rather what you can and shouldn't do as a person. You're taking the game a little too seriously when you start monitoring people's private conversations.

I would personally much rather play on a server with cheaters than on a server that moderates private messages. Fighting cheaters can be enjoyable. Knowing someone is reading something I don't want them to isn't.

@ Dover:

I wouldn't consider "pinpointing someone's house" as vital private info. People give their home addresses out over the internet everyday..
