Yeah, what you're looking for is pretty broad. Just take a day or so and head to an auto-mall or a bunch of dealerships from all the different brands. Find what you like, get to know the vehicles, and you'll start narrowing down the choices, or discover ones you never thought of. You should be able to find good financial incentives, too. Most of all, do your research, because a car is a big decision.

There is one car that I think would fit most of your needs, and can be had for a decent price new or used. : The Pontiac G8 V6.

Fuel economy isn't like a Civic because it's a bigger car, but it's a nice one.

I'll also echo Romaner's concerns about the 350Z. Adding to chassis issues, they were popular with late-20/early-30's men, so a lot of them were driven hard. Some I've seen were nightmares when it came to the drivetrain, and electronics because of poor installations/removals of aftermarket stereo's. Have a good mechanic check out the used vehicles you really like, because they'll spot things you won't.
