
Subject: Re: Childish n00bstories behavoir
Posted by ChewML on Sat, 22 Aug 2009 00:22:49 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Ok... putting aside all the "death of Ren" talk for a minute...

Can you give any good defense as to why there was ever a such word filter in place at these forums which give off a neutral idea?

And no denying that there ever was is not a good defense, as you might aswell call everyone else who had seen it an idiot/liar/whatever...

Owning a business and employing 9 people may be good enough for some people who like power... but then again there are the others who try to take over the world. So why would it be so hard to believe that you enjoy playing the "I pay the bills" card way too much.

As most of us know by now online is not the same as IRL... So you prolly couldn't treat 9 employees like dog poo IRL w/o them quitting... Taking some of your thunder with them.

BUT, here in the magic kingdom of the interwebs, if you run a website/server, and people need to use that service... it is much easier to be a tyrant.

Nobody likes a tyrant IRL, or on the internet.

I was not part of the "exodus" of n00bstories. I left before then, because I was tired of how it was being ran. The people at the top never seemed to be around, and when they were... it was not very pleasant or productive.

A lot of things that happened behind the curtains there were never handled properly/completely... but the normal players/customers didn't know it all.

IRL the customers know a lot more about the places they patronize. If those places do things the general public does not agree with they lose business. You would lose a lot more customers if your players/customers saw more of what is said in private.

Anybody that would stay is either as bad, or just kissing butt hoping to climb the ladder quickly after the others jump down.

Ok, back to the "death of Ren" talk...

If you continue to run both of these communities that you pay the bills for, I personally believe you would be contributing to the demise of Ren more than a new server/community being started.
