Actually, the threat was festering for quite some time before George Bush's presidency. If you read 'Against all Enemies' by Richard Clarke, you'll see that both the Clinton and Bush administrations had failed in a number of ways in curbing the attack.

However, the blame lies less with the indicisiveness of either president, and more with the various agencies like the military and CIA being incredibly incompetent. It's shameful to see that the government had been tracking Osama bin Laden and were on the verge of using an unmanned drone to drop a small payload onto him between his daily rounds, only to have the idea aborted because those agencies are idiots and won't let the other do shit-all without bitchin'.
