Crimson wrote on Tue, 22 September 2009 01:37 That's bullshit. I've removed countless Reborn leaks, leaks of other mods, people's private information (such as phone numbers, real names), etc. over the years. It's only now that NS has become a victim that all of sudden I'm "biased". Hmm. I wasn't considering them.

Tushe, I suppose.

Edit:

I do tend to agree with what Zimmer said (lol). I can personally see two roles here. One is a role of concern and security, the other is just the flaunting of show-offy power.

If someone is to be involved in an info leak, the info would most effectively be spread through faster means, such as an IM.. not a PM on a forum, especially a forum where the admin is also an admin of what the leak pertains to.

Wouldn't it be more effective to punish said people by revoking a more effective privilege? What exactly is revoking PMs going to do other than start a bunch of stupid debates that get a bunch of ignorant bystanders, like myself, involved?

(I'm about to get flamed from the other side for saying that, but that's how I feel the punishment should be dealt.
