To be honest, ask yourself this question: do I really need to start a server when over 80 % of the current servers are already there, empty?

If the answer to this is "yes" for you, then ask yourself this question: do I really want to spend a couple of hours to setup my server while it won't be used? If your answer is "yes", then I suggest you use those hours to figure things out with the help of the existing stickies in the win32fds subforum.
