Nice job - once again choosing to disagree (which is certainly your right) but not providing any supporting facts/information/evidence. Bravo !

How can I possibly answer such a statement like "America does more for the world than the world does for America". I mean, what 'facts' do you want to hear? The statement itself is just so crazy that you can't debate it.

The only proper answer would be "America doesn't give a fuck about the rest of the world" You can't argue it but I can. Let's go back in time and say there was no thirteen colonies. Let's say England set out on colonizing the Americas. Now let's say it was now only the French in the north and the Spanish in the south. They might meet somewhere around Florida (Spanish wouldn't head very far north looking for gold.) So now we have New Spain and New France.

Still think the world hasn't done at least as much for America as the America did for the world? The world created the United States. No country has done more for the rest of the world than the world did for it. The United States owes the rest of the world its existence. All countries owe the rest of the world their existence. No country could form without the help of another. Even the first country had help from areas that would become countries

Good points, save the fact the French would probably flee America when the sun changed direction & they saw their shadows. (I mean for real they let the Nazis walk in and take their country). What are you trying to get at here? That no country should recognize or thank their founder fathers/hard work/dedication/moral principles/ppl who shed blood&died for the USA [etc] but should rather be thanking the rest of the world for their existence?

Dear Europe, thanks for not being successful when trying to crush us/control us.

Dear Spain, thanks for taking one for the team and losing the Spanish American war.

Dear Japan, thanks for not being able to conquer us even though you also were as depraved as to use 'suicide-bombers'.

Dear former Soviet Union, thank you for letting us exist.

Dear France - thanks for the Statue of Liberty and thanks for selling Iraq military weapons as recent as January.

As of now the USA is the global super power. If we were ruthless other countries would be thanking us for allowing them to exist, not the other way around. We had to fight for this country and we won then became the super power of the world. End of story.

Your right America doesn't give a fuck about the rest of the world. That's why we have thousands of troops in foreign land (see Germany/Europe/Korea), send out peace keeping missions, standing up for other people (see Iraq where in the last "election" Saddam got 99% of the vote and they tallied all of this less than 24hrs) and BILLIONS of dollars in aid / loans we will never see again. But hey you just may be right...America doesn't give a flip about anyone.

You know if America weren't #1 but rather #2/#3/#4 on the "super power" list we wouldn't be having this convo - you'd be talking about how the OTHER #1 nation owes everyone else for their greatness. Stop trying to be a leach of greatness.

PLEASE EMAIL ME to talk about this personally -- I dont like hijacking threads.
