it leaves out the geeky opera sound that stereotypical true metal is supposed to have and replaces it with ownage and pain

You've got it backwards. This overly-heavy metal is the stereotype. The "geeky" opera sound is an attempt to steer metal back into a place where it can still have the qualities that separates music from repetitive noise, like melody.

Seriously, that shit you posted is terrible. Shitty "metal" like that is spelled "Metul", with a U, to separate it from proper metal music.
lol. again.

Is this that awesome songwriting you were talking about in the other thread?
