1. Zeratul got banned from Jelly.

1.25 The fact that he got banned from Jelly inspired him to inquire about other people's server preferences/recommendations here.

1.5 If I understand correctly, Jelly normally unbans people after a certain amount of time pending what they do to get banned in the first place.

1.75 BUT Zeratul has lowered his chances of being unbanned by telling lies in the beginning.

2. After IRC logs were posted showing BIATCH detecting BH Zeratul has been completely honest, which is still refreshing even though he cheated.

3. Every server has their own policies (written or not) about banning people who were caught cheating on other servers. Some might always ban anyone whoever cheated anywhere, while others might sit back, watch, and wait until the known cheater has done it on their server. Of course the situation varies by the cheater (example = mandai).

3.5 No server should really be questioned on their choice to ban or not unless the person actually cheated on their server. It is up to each communities staff to decide on how much of a threat to their gameplay this person is.

4. If you do not agree with a servers choice in the matter of banning a known cheater, don't play there when the player is in, maybe not at all. Or maybe take it up with the staff of that server respectfully if you think they might have missed some evidence that would likely change their minds.

5. No need to start a flame fest here, it obviously won't do any good.
That sums it up
