But if it was making fun of Bush or his wife, no one would care nearly as much. That's the point I'm trying to make here.

Just one difference. Comedians, late night talk show hosts, etc are people whose job it is to entertain people and this usually happens when they make fun of certain people.

If someone, who I had a business contract with, publicly made fun of the president's wife I would also end that contract. Not because it is racist, not because I dislike it, but because it is unprofessional.

Yes, but for one, I haven't really seen them do a bit about Obama or his wife (yet) in a similar fashion. If they were, I GUARANTEE people would bitch about racism.

Like I said, yes it's immature, and I understand why someone would be a little uncomfortable from that aspect, but I just don't think that was the only reason. The guy even said "I didn't mean for it to be malicious, I just meant for it to be political humor". Which means that people didn't SEE IT as political humor, and saw it as- of course- racism .

which is fucking bullshit.
