reborn wrote on Mon, 15 March 2010 08:25Now you're just resorting to name calling. I guess you've just been trolling me this whole time?

Positive discrimination is pretty bad actually, considering the times we live in.

But seriously, I do not agree with your whole theory of "Black people had it really bad, so basically you better watch what you say!".

It was insensative to portray Bush as a monkey, and equally so to portray Michelle as a monkey, too. But I do not believe it's more insensative to Michelle's feelings because she is black, just equally so.

The guy said it was political humour, there was no intent of racism. If people saw it that way, then perhaps in their own heart they have some pre-conceptions?

In my mind it's like believing you cannot compare George Michael or Elton John to anything that has been used in a derogatory way against homo-sexuals, just in case it hurts their feelings more than it would someone who is not a homo-sexual.

If I called someone a big fairy, purely because they are skirting and dancing around a sensative subject, is it worse because they are homo-sexual?

But anyway, like I said, I'm pretty sure you're trolling me anyway, so whatever...

You're telling me there's no difference between me calling you a faggot over the internet and saying it to a homosexual person's face?

Oh, and as long as you call it political humor, anything goes, right? I guess if I write a self-proclaimed politically humorous magazine article about how I wish all of Benjamin Netanjahu's family had been gassed in Auschwitz I'm not being racist...right?

You're the one putting positive discrimination in the UK on the same level as slavery - you really shouldn't label me a troll for calling you out on that inane comparison.

The intellectual and social depth of the Renegade community never ceases to amaze.

George, you're really getting to me!!!11 I'm gonna take you serious any second now!!!11