Where I live (greater Toronto area) McDonalds used to be terrible from the late 90s till the mid 2000s, but they all ended up renovating and doubling their standards. Everything now is made to order and relatively fresh. Although it's far from my favourite fast food place, you get what you pay (my meals there are like 4 bucks) for and it's always the same.

I voted Burger King, because for the past 5 or 6 years, I've regretted every time I've eaten there. My sandwich looks and tastes different every time, its more expensive than most places, and the overall experience is sub par.

Taco Bell is dirty, but tasty. I feel bad when I go there, but not because the food was bad or a gyp. KFC used to be delicious here, but it constantly went down hill and now I wouldn't eat at an actual KFC unless it were in a mall, where they are constantly restocking.

The best food places are the indie, non-franchise joints. I think my favourite fast food place from that list is Wendy's. I eat there every couples weeks and I don't think I've ever had a terrible meal. One of my favourite fast foods in general is Harvey's, which they don't have in the U.S, but it's popular in Canada and they grill all their burgers. You also get to choose all your toppings, and they give you a pretty thick patty.
