It's expert's lucky andm y unlucky day... Everyone seems to have forgotten about this rule, which was introduced by the administration a few months back (God knows why...).

Quote:

Leaks/Private Information: RenegadeForums.com does not support or endorse the leaking of confidential or restricted information, such as leaked closed alpha/beta software, leaked source code, leaked logs, private messages, etc. Offenders will suffer any appropriate punishment up to and including post deletion/edits, temporary/permanent bans, and private message use restriction.

This means I need to go through all the logs (ble) to check if there's private information in it... which I guess there is, otherwise it wouldn't be able to cause this much drama! As I have no time to do this at this moment, I removed them for the moment.

I must admit I don't like it, but if we're going to enforce a rule in one situation then we need to stay regular and do it in the other situation as well.

As to the whole drama, all I'll say is that there's no shame at working in Mc Donalds at all, at least it's a contribution to the economy and that IPB doesn't just go spitting out emails with PM's to the admins. I know what I'm talking about there...
