

---

Subject: Re: Should we ban the burqa?

Posted by R315r4z0r on Mon, 07 Jun 2010 01:32:11 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

There is no right decision here. If you want to keep it 'American' then you can't ban it but at the same time you can't support it.

The Constitution has countless flaws in it that lead to many different paradoxes such as this.

The Constitution permits religious freedom but contradicts that same freedom if the religion overrides other rights granted in the Bill of Rights.

Just how people have the right to peacefully protest something but banning of anything that isn't directly imposing on other people's rights is unconstitutional. (Banning anything considered 'obscene' that isn't directly restricting the rights of someone else should be and is unconstitutional, yet it happens on almost a daily basis.)

The way the bill of rights is set up and how the structure and ideals of the country are supposed to work, it is downright impossible for America to function the way it was designed to. There are way too many 'damned if you do; damned if you don't' paradoxes in the government and the Constitution that make the running of this country completely and utterly impossible. It's amazing that we survived this long in such chaos.

---