renalpha wrote on Sun, 13 June 2010 17:21 Yeah thats correct, normally i use the crossfader to come up slowly when adding a second beatdrum to the song. It makes the song better of having a lot of sounds.

Now lately im mixing up all tracks for a internet radio initiative. www.sound-officials.nl , a lot of things to do though.

Thanks though for your reply.

Im not at home right now, so i forgot the song name.

Most of them have been mixed to this kind of tracks.

I will come back to this later.

Personally I don't like the use of a crossfader. While it does it's job, I prefer the use of bass/treble mid sliders to mix in the tracks. This is indeed a bit more complicated, but if done right it's certainly worth the effort.

I have to note however that I might be biased. I'm more into Tech-house/Techno than into House, but that's mostly because of the bass.
