One day a possible employer might do a little searching on you, and I guess he doesn't like gambling addicts or cocaine users.

Employer: So Mark, despite your outstanding quantity of qualifications for this job; I have one more question for you. Do have a nick name affiliated with any online game you play?

Mark: Why...yes I do, Di3HardNL. I can't see how this is rela...

Employer: SILENCE! Let me google you. I have a strong dislike for cocaine users and gambling addicts and I fear you may be one of them. Hmm, Renegade forums user...what's this? "Last month I lost 1.500 Euro's while gambling" "Last month I took my first line cocaine."

OH MY GOD; GET THE FUCK OUT OF MY OFFICE NAAAOOOWWW

Lol.

On a serious note, what is more likely is that they will Google or Facebook (using site names as verbs FTW) his real name, and his online nickname may well be mentioned somewhere on his profile, they might then google that, and find this.

At any rate, all I've discovered is that users on cocaine are harder to moderate, stop taking it! That indeed.

It doesn't necessarily happen, but it would be a pity if it would.
