NavySEAL55KIRBY098 And for those who haven't played C&C 95, Seth was the right hand man who grew jealous of the player for doing so well, and drawing KANE'S praise. He keeps trying to send you on his personal missions to benefit himself, and Kane shoots him in the head for it. I just found it neat, considering how minor a character he was in the overall scheme of the rise of Nod.

I thought it was for trying to attack the pentagon

It was. He was trying for a power gambit. If he could defeat the U.S. the resulting power from that confusion would allow him to challenge Kane for leadership of Nod.
