The concept of death doesn't really scare me... I just think of it as extended unconsciousness. You wont be conscious to miss any of the things you care about now, so there really is no reason to fear it.

However, what does scare me is the concept of nothing. Sometime in the past, there had to be nothing. Our universe hasn't always been, there had to be nothing it came out of. Eventually, that nothing will enclose back into us, trillions upon trillions of years from now, however. Whether humans will still exist at that time is up for debate. But just the concept of there being nothing just scares me.
