If put in the same position, and it was my daughter, I would like to think that I could restrain myself from reacting badly to the guy. Not because I owe him anything, for all I care he could get run over by a bus.

However, perhaps you're right... In the heat of the moment I might lose self control and strangle him.

I do not agree that it's only a preventative form of action though. In the same position, I would like to think that I would invite my daughter and her friend to spend the rest of the evening in the living room with me and my wife (if all he wants is sex, or he is embarrassed, then he'll leave most likely).

Once he has left, I would have a talk with my daughter (making sure my wife was there too to back me up and stress the points I was making).

It's a far safer move in my opinion.
