if someone isn't willing to repair to win a game then that's a personal fault - i do what i think will help my team win now ask me if i give a shit about the ladder bingo

if says they weren't really playing seriously and that's why their results are scarcely impressive, one of two things is the case

1. it's not really true, they just want to feel better than they are
2. it is true, they weren't trying to help their team... in what sense, then, are they a good player?

if someone made the kind of dumbass excuses to explain away an unimpressive performance in clan games, i think people like hitman and simpee would see through it. when talking about large games, however... anything's preferable to a non-sarcastic non-excusemaking "yeah, spoony is better than me"
