the idea of being judged by a god after death certainly doesn't seem a hopeful idea to me, especially given the absolutely monstrous depiction of that god in both the bible and the quran. Well, humans are animals and they know all too well that they will one day eventually die.

But as I said, religion only really started as a way to bring people hope when there really wasn't anything.

Since then it has grown into this large grotesque book of rules and magic and violence.

It's long served it's purpose and continuing it is only damning humanity to itself.
