Here's the bit that cracked me up:

Quote:players are rewarded for shooting enemies in the private parts (such as the buttocks)

Just think about this for a second. The writer of the article is either so prudish or so stupid as to think that saying "private parts" doesn't provide enough of a description. Or that they needed to hide behind that grade-school silliness at all instead of just using the word genitals- because I think we all know that it ain't being shot in the ass that has Fox in an uproar here.

Claiming that the rating system isn't enforced is a flat-out lie at this point... games have been the media's punching bag for so long now that even online stores are requiring age verification. It isn't the store's responsibility if some dipshit gullible parent goes and buys their 9-year-old an M-rated game. Besides, when the fuck did kids turn into such fragile little pansies anyway? Our entire civilization needs to grow a pair and stop agonizing over kids seeing tits and gore before they turn thirty.

Score another FAIL for the Moral High Ground.
