

---

Subject: Re: Fail.

Posted by R315r4z0r on Tue, 19 Apr 2011 00:36:37 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

If you have a fallback belief for something, you are much less likely to adapt more knowledge or tolerance.

For example, if you start to look at your own abilities and credit your shortcomings for mental limitations, then you therefore will lose all your resolve to try and better yourself because you will start believing that you can never improve.

Religious folk see religion as their main way of life. In this case, it's their limitation. As such, they have no true desire to attempt learning the ways of the world and the universe not to mention the ways of other people.

In my opinion, that's a very selfish way of thinking; believing that as long as they commit to their religion, everything else in the world is secondary or beneath their appeal.

"If I follow my holy book, there is no reason for me accept these peons. Maybe I'll play along with them for my enjoyment, but when it comes right down to it, I'm the one who will be going to heaven after all."

---