

---

Subject: Re: Fail.

Posted by R315r4z0r on Tue, 19 Apr 2011 02:37:50 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Oh, yes, of course. That goes without saying.

But have you ever seen those religious people who try to fight science with science? I remember seeing a video once where someone was trying to disprove the theory of evolution by claiming that life can miraculously develop inside a sealed jar of peanut butter.

There are people that will have opinions that transcend the notions of right and wrong. What they have spent their life focused on consumes them and becomes their primary truth. Everything else, right or wrong, is secondary and isn't really of any true importance to them.

Look at physical religious conflicts as an example. Each combatant becomes so obsessed with their beliefs that they cancel out their desire to tolerate the rest of the world. If Christianity is a religion about peace on Earth and good will towards other men, then why is it that there were so many religious crusades for Christianity in the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries? How does one preach peace but then turn around and start war?

---