MineCraft's graphics are a surprisingly nice break from the brown and bloom of modern vidya.

It has that sorta classic, cartoony feel games are supposed to have. Yeah, it's a sort of poor excuse for poor graphics, but it's not that bad when you get into it.

Anyways, the reason why people like it is because it's a completely randomly generated world with virtually infinite size (Technically not infinite, but 8x the size of Earth).

Plus, you can pretty much build whatever you want. Yeah, it takes some time, but that's kind of what a sandbox game is supposed to be. Ultimately, that's what videogames are, anyways.

And if you don't think it's exciting, go cave exploring with nothing more than some torches, some ladders, and a sword. Or maybe not even the sword.

...also pretty much all the fun comes from the actual bought version, Classic is crap.
