

---

Subject: Re: Bin Laden

Posted by EvilWhiteDragon on Fri, 06 May 2011 10:23:02 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

reborn wrote on Fri, 06 May 2011 11:15 The Archbishop of Canterbury has spoken out saying he was uncomfortable with how Osama had been killed while un-armed, and that the differing versions of details emerging surrounding his death did little to help ease his concerns.

<http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/uk-13291480>

Religion started this whole thing, I hope he shuts his big mouth and keeps out of it. I would call this actually a quite humane thing to say. We as the free world advocate freedom and civil rights. Who are we if we cannot live by those rules laid down by ourself and our believes?

It's a pity the USA soldiers played judge jury and executioner, even more so if he was indeed unarmed. I would have wanted Osama to see court, so the hatebeards would see how we even treat our most hated enemies.

Pretty darn civilized, even though we do kill them (as painless as possible even) in the end.

With this action the USA is not better than a lot of murderers and arguably not much better than terrorists either.

To be clear, I don't like religion, at least not in it's current and past form, but in this case it's not as much about religion as it is about common sense and humanity.

---