MRL, Orca and Apache rockets should all track targets like the AGT rockets do, however actually getting them to lock onto a target is quite difficult as the criteria for determining whether it will lock or just track to the point they *were* at seems rather hit and miss in my experience.

Perhaps this '6lock' thing somehow makes it more likely to get a lock than firing normally, however it fires the same ammo so theoretically either method of firing should have the same chance to lock.
